Notes

One of the most dramatic and pleasing features of the 4400 is the huge, stainless-steel framed window and pillarless door between the cockpit and saloon. Once open, the easy flow between the two areas not only creates a refreshing, relaxed ambience, but is also immensely practical. In the cockpit you can stretch out on a generous lounge and take advantage of a table that adjusts (gas assisted) to serve as a dining table, coffee table or day bed. Fenders or other bulky equipment can be shoved away neatly in the enormous storage locker in the rear of the transom. The swim platform has also been thoughtfully designed with its concealed swim ladder and, if you have a tender, can be fitted with an optional hydraulic lift. Even access to the engines has been carefully considered. There's a small opening in the forward area of the cockpit for general inspections and a large section of the cockpit floor can be raised using a remote-activated electric control for full engine-room access. For our designers, details make all the difference and they are forever asking how they can make life on board as smooth and pleasurable as possible. Take the sun pad on the foredeck: it has safety rails and drink holders, it comes with a cover, is selfdraining and has a wind deflector incorporated at the front edge to prevent lifting in a breeze or when cruising at speed. Access to the foredeck is also that much safer and easier by virtue of wide side walk-around decks with courtesy lights on the steps either side of the cockpit.
